Someone can have post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) if he or she experienced, witnessed, or participated in something that was traumatizing. PTSD can result from terrifying experiences such as rape, kidnapping, natural disasters, war or serious accidents such as airplane crashes. The psychological damage can interfere with a person's ability to hold a job or to develop intimate relationships with others.

Anyone can develop PTSD, even children.

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS

People with PTSD typically avoid situations that remind them of the traumatic event because they can cause intense distress or even panic attacks. Symptoms include:

- Constantly reliving the event
- Persistent anxiety
- Exaggerated reactions
- Difficulty concentrating
- Nightmares
- Insomnia

DIAGNOSIS

Someone can be diagnosed with PTSD if the symptoms last over one month. Signs and symptoms may not show up immediately after the event for some people.

TREATMENT

Treatment for PTSD often includes both psychotherapy and medication. Psychotherapy can help people who have PTSD get back a sense of control over their lives. They also may need therapy to change patterns of behavior and to learn relaxation techniques.

Support from family and friends can help speed recovery and healing. Medications can ease the symptoms as well. Speak with your primary care provider or behavioral health provider if you have the above symptoms or any other concerns.

SELF-HELP TIPS

- Talk about the painful event with family and friends.
- Exercise regularly to work out your frustration and anger.
- Try yoga, meditation, or deep breathing exercises.
- Make time to relax, exercise, and do things you enjoy.
